TEACHERS.

The Los Angeles Conservatory of Music,

No. 406 SOUTH MAIN STREET, NEAR Fifth, an institution devoted exclusively to the study of music. Furnishes instruction to all branches of music, from a thorough graded and systematic course of study. Each department in charge of an artist of the highest reputation and proficiency. The plan of tuition is also a matter of surprise to him that has not had experience in the head of the throat.

At times many of the symptoms of catarrh may seem to abate, and the patient is led to hope that the disease is about to wear off, but such favorable symptoms soon disappear, only to re-use his horror that instead of recovering from the disease it is somewhat changed in its character and has developed in the throat. Hoarseness of existence is often felt in reading, speaking, or singing; hoarseness at times occurs, a dryness of throat, or music is felt in the throat, or it appears that some foreign substance, as, for instance, a hair, obstructed the throat; there becomes a sense of languor a d fatigue, breath lessens upon a little exercise, a short, hacking cough, a peculiar sound in clearing the throat, a feeling as though there were not room enough in the chest to breathe freely, and such symptoms occur after the disease has made considerable progress. Then it is a time when no symptom is absent to betray the dreadful work. Us to this time the progress of the disease may have been slow, and the patient may, in expressing his condition, say, "I will wear off," declare that he has had the catarrh for years, and has not seemed to become much worse, and trusts that he will "wear that type" recover; but his delusion is the grand error that has peopled our cemeteries with consumptive forms, as all forms of catarrh end finally in consumption.

The treatment of this disease requires care and perseverance to conduct it to a successful issue. The remedies must be carefully adapted to the stage of the disease in each case, and applied daily and effectual, which may be done by the patients themselves, wherever they may be, and at hour hand-books, chart-d-d, directions, etc., are would hereby urge our eastern friends the necessity of direct medication in the treatment of these diseases, and not to depend upon the beneficial effects of the climate alone for their restoration to health, as thousands and thousands find their way to the grave, who might have been cured with the aid of proper remedies.

Inhalations are applicable to all diseases of the respiratory organs, including catarrh, throat diseases, asthma, bronchitis, consumption, and additional aid of same can be cured by this mode of treatment when nothing else can reach them. A positive cure effected in every case if taken in time.

Consultation free, and prices within the reach of all.

Those who desire to consult me in regard to their cases had better call at the office for an examination, but if impossible to visit the office personally may at the f-l-w-ing, at of questions and circular, both of which will be sent free of charge. Address

THE MORNING'S NEWS.

The President has designated Lieutenant-General Sheridan to act as Secretary of War during the absence of Secretary Lincoln.

The English government has decided to expend £1,000,000 on its fortifications in Aden, Singapore and Hong Kong. Orders have been sent from the war office to hasten the work.

Mr. Blaine is spending Sunday at South Bend, Indiana.

General Butler will speak Sunday at Oneida, New York.

Wilhelm First, Duke of Brunswick, died this morning.

THE Santa Ana Standard, too, is a humorous paper. It says: "The Republicans are terribly frightened over the outlook in Illinois," etc.

THE pious and pure Mr. Beecher is still harping upon his objections to Mr. Blaine. The hypercritical prejudices of Beecher won't affect results. They don't Tilt-on his views.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL MARSHALL, the fiery and oratorical son of thunder, erstwhile a three-ply, boiler-plated Democrat, has gone out from the old party and is a Butler convert.

THERE is a man in Pennsylvania who will not support Blaine, believing the Plumed Knight, while in the United States Senate, conspired with others to defeat his nomination for justice of the peace.

THE Occidental Breaker swashes over with the following: "If the Prohibitionists in Ohio have any character at all, the November election will go for Cleveland. If they are liars, it will go for Blaine." Well, it will go for Blaine. Hence——— See?

THE new ballot paper sent out by the Secretary of the State this year is pale blue in color, instead of flesh color, as for a few years past. The Secretary is a Democrat, and he doubtless feels pale blue. This able suggestion is made by the Anaheim Gazette, which is not a Democratic paper, hence its probable correctness.

IT is reported that of fourteen distinguished citizens of Buffalo who were invited to Mrs. Carey's dinner party, there to meet Gov. Cleveland, eleven sent "regrets." The vacancies were filled up by asking in anybody who would accept. No wonder Grover made his recent visit home of such short duration.

CHICAGO Tribune: The Presidential campaign of 1884, so far as the Democratic side is concerned, will be distinguished in the future as the campaign of lies and forgeries. Never in the history of party contests in this country has a candidate been assailed with so many deliberate forgeries, so many baseless calumnies and slanders as Mr. Blaine.

THE Republican candidate for Treasurer is a German, a farmer and an old resident of this county, and has held many offices of honor and trust. The Grass Valley Tidings, a Democratic paper, says of him: "George Gephard has been nominated for County Treasurer by the Republican Convention of Los Angeles. That is a nomination eminently fit to be made, and we hope he will be elected."

THE growth and prosperity of Los Angeles seem to have an irritating effect upon San Francisco. Tourists who recently visited us state that in the city they heard the most appalling statements in regard to the filth of our streets and the bad water which Los Angeles was compelled to drink. This jealousy is very foolish. There is room enough in Southern California for Los Angeles to grow without interfering in the least with the growth and prosperity of the cities by the Golden Gate. All Los Angeles wants is to have the truth told about her, and then she is willing to stand or fall upon her own merits.

"IF the party managers meant free trade, why didn't they put it in the platform?" If they meant protection why is it not there? If they had any policy on the subject except that of agitation and playing at blind man's bluff, why isn't it there?" These are the pertinent inquiries of John A. Koons, who was a conspicuous Democratic politician of Western Maryland, but who having a large stake in the common prosperity, has come out heart and soul for Blaine and Logan.

GEN. GRANT has been visited by the South American commission, and has given them his views on how best to extend our commerce in that quarter. He urges that our consular system be organized on a more commercial basis, and that subsidized steamship lines should be established between this country and ports where we could naturally expect trade to develop. There seems to be a general concurrence in these views by those whose advice is sought by the commission, and it is probable that their report will embody such a policy.

JAMES in his Shipping Gazette thus polishes off Henry T. Hazard: "H. Hazard, the regular Republican nominee for the 77th District, has how saddled his mule, and will take the political field with forty years of youth on his expansive brow, even if he was born in Chicago, and came to California in 1852, and for reasons of his own has been raised in Los Angeles city, and became as stationary as the old Spanish guns on the Court-house corners. Henry is quite a gun, that is the reason he was so long in going off before he took his nomination, clearly showing that the man did not seek the office, but the office was hunting him to become a martyr for his countrymen. Henry is an extreme blonde, sports a Joaquin Miller mustache, has tender feet, never treads on anything weaker than himself, is a lawyer with a heart, a rare thing in that trade, is not consumptive, has one lung left, and should he reach the Capital on the 4th of November, pledges Captain Janes to appoint him a page. His construction shows he was built on the Dutch galliot principle, square at both ends. A square man is a good thing now days, and says the fight lays between him and Janes. He has a good record as a lawyer, and will without doubt poll his party's vote; is not particular about his dress, but relies on his shape, never was a Butler or a railroad attorney, but might be; is a brilliant orator, and his eloquence will bring Pasadena to his feet."

YOUNG COLLEGIANS.

Mr. Blaine Gives Them a Problem to Solve.

HIS SPEECH AT ANN ARBOR YESTERDAY.

Why Is It That a Man Educated to Free Trade at Twenty Becomes a Protectionist at Forty?

JACKSON, Mich. Oct. 18.— Iaine left Detroit this morning. This is the last day of his tour in Michigan, and he will spend Sunday at South Bend, Indiana. His first stop this morning was at Ann Arbor, where there was a very large crowd around the depot, but the students of the University seemed to have taken possession of the place, and when Blaine appeared the cheering and yelling was so hearty and long continued that they seemed likely to occupy the whole time that the train could remain at Ann Arbor. Blaine spoke at some length of the responsibility of educated young men. He said:

But I am glad to witness it and hear it, for it implies the enthusiasm and strength of youth, and from the youth of the country is constantly recruited the Republican party. [Wild cheering.] What we lose from desertion and disappointment and dissatisfaction on the part of the elders is far more than made up by the young men of the country who are just coming into action. [Great cheering.] Not only that, a proportion which holds good for young men of all classes, but we have a very remarkable proportion of the educated young men of the country. "I wish to leave with these young collegians a problem in relation to one of the great industrial issues of the time, a problem which will confront them in their future careers, that is to find out why so many college youths who are free-traders at 20 become prohibitionists at 40. [Laughter and cheers.] I think the answer will be found in the fact that at 40 they have taken their degree in the university of experience. After all, there is much wider and more valuable than the university of theory. [Cheers.] Our college boys are taught—I was myself taught, when I was a college boy—the doctrine of free trade; but the United States stands as a perpetual and irrefutable argument and sample of the value in a new country, of the doctrine of protection. [Enthusiastic and prolonged cheering.] I am glad to meet you, not merely as those interested in a political campaign, but as young men] who are the pride and hope of the country. I deal with the great problems of the future in this marvelous experiment of a people governing themselves by free and universal suffrage, nothing can avail except our education and constantly corrected public opinion. [Cheers.] I wish to impress upon every man who has had the advantage of a university education that he is every day more and more placed in debt to his country, and that just in proportion as he progresses in knowledge and wisdom, just in that proportion will he be expected to pay back, in patriotic labor, the country which nurtured him. [Good," "good," and cheers.] I congratulate you on being born to such a great opportunity, to a harvest that is ripe for the sickle, into a field that is continually expanding. By the time you have your battle of life in a great nation of freemen, you go forth, each of you, with just as good a chance in life as any other man has, and you go with the added opportunities which education gives. I commend to you your responsibilities, for the responsibilities of an educated American are higher and deeper and broader and greater than those of an educated man in any other land, and just in proportion as your opportunities are greater will you be held to account in this life and the life which is to come. [Great and prolonged cheering.] He spoke at some length on the tariff as the great issue of the campaign, arguing that the maintenance of a protective policy was of far greater importance to the workingmen than to any other class in the community. In the same connection he warned workingmen that their labor unions would be powerless to protect them against the competition of the cheap labor of the world if the protective tariff was abolished. Blaine was driven to the house of Mr. C. J. M. Studebaker, whose guest he will be until Monday. Later in the evening he received a very large torchlight procession.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Oct. 18.—At a little after 3 o'clock the train arrived at South Bend. The city was thronged, the workshops and many of the business houses being closed and the day devoted to politics. In the forenoon there had been a great trades procession as the afternoon was to be given to the Blaine reception. In the evening there was a torchlight procession. Blaine was escorted through the principal streets by a large body of Plumed Knights, and there was a continuous line of decorated houses and a continuous crowd along the whole route. It was about 5:30 when the procession reached the stand erected near the Courthouse. The two Michigan Senators, Conger and Palmer, were first introduced. After they had given some account of the tour through Michigan, Blaine was introduced amid enthusiastic cheers and made a speech.

The Cable Landed.

CONEY ISLAND, N.Y., Oct. 18.—The Bennett-Mackay cable was landed two hundred yards east of the Oriental Hotel at 12:15 o'clock this afternoon, and at 2 o'clock the end was placed on the cable station, being carried through the trench on the shoulders of twenty men. About 7 a. m. the tug left the Faraday with two miles of cable aboard and buoyed one end two miles from shore, and then started towards land paying out the cable; when the slack of a mile had been paid out, the end of the cable was coiled from the tug on the raft, ropes anchored on the beach, connected with the raft containing ten sailors, to which the raft with the cable and a small boat were attached by hawsers. A number of sailors on shore hauled in one rope, while those on the first raft hauled the other. It was slow work, owing to a heavy wind and the waves.

Partial Eclipse of the Sun

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 18.—A partial eclipse of the sun occurred this afternoon. The first contact began at 4:20. The middle of the eclipse occurred here a few minutes before sundown. The latest contact occurred in the Pacific Ocean in latitude 34 degrees north, longitude 135 degrees west, about 600 miles southwest from San Francisco. It was visible from the Sandwich Islands on the south to the eighteenth parallel north and from the eastern part of the Rocky mountains to the western part of Siberia. No extraordinary phenomena is reported in connection therewith.

American Steel in English Rails.

MONTREAL, Oct. 18.—The Canadian Pacific Railway has just concluded a contract with the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company of Scranton, Pa., for 10,000 tons of steel rails at $25.50 per ton at the mills, or delivered to any Canadian port or in New York for $26.50. It is believed this is the first time an American company has been successful in competition with English manufacturers for steel rails delivered in Canada. The reason given by the assistant General Manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway is that the American price is about two dollars per ton cheaper, owing to present competition among manufacturers there.

A Victim of Election Day.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 18.—Policeman Michael Gorman died to-day. He was shot last Tuesday in a small riot among colored men. Gorman attempted to arrest a man, and was shot in the back by an unknown man. This was the beginning of the riot in which Henry Brown, colored, was also killed in the affray of Tuesday evening. On the receipt of the news of the wounding of Gorman, Mrs. Rincan, sister of Gorman, became ill, and this morning upon hearing of his death she fell into a comatose state and died in a few hours.

A Colorado Prize-fight.

DENVER, Col., Oct. 18.—A prize-fight with three-ounce gloves occurred at Jewell Park this afternoon between John P. Clow, middle-weight champion of Colorado, and John O. Davies, a local celebrity, for $600 and the championship of the State. Davies was declared the winner in the eleventh round.

Russia Fortifying.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 18.—The Russian government has decided to fortify Vladivostock and construct wharves and docks there in the bay at Okhotsk. It has been decided also to strengthen the Russian fleet in the Pacific.

German Socialists.

ANTWERP, Oct. 18.—Janson, the radical leader, has induced the Socialists to withdraw their candidates and support the Liberal nominees at the Communal election. Troops are held in readiness.

OHIO ELECTION.

A Comparison of the Greenback and Prohibition Vote.

Associated Press Dispatches to The Times.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 18.—Returns by counties completed do not change the pluralities given last night. Unexpected Prohibition and Greenback-Butler votes increase proportionately with those of the Democrats and Republicans. The Prohibition vote, last year 8,862, is this year 9,510. The Greenback vote, last year 2,937, is this year 3,700, showing no coalition, but party lines being closely followed. The total Prohibition and Greenback vote is 13,447, or 1,126 more than Robinson's plurality. In October, 1880, it was 716,186; November, 1880, it was 724,947. There is no change in Congressmen, except an increase of 150 in Romeis's majority over Hurd.

CLEVELAND, Oct. 18.—The official canvass of the vote of Cuyahoga county shows the total vote of the county 44,104; of the city 35,765. TRIED FOR POLYGAMY.

The Clawson Case at Salt Lake Given to the Jury.

SALT LAKE, Oct. 18.—The Clawson polygamy trial was finished to-day. The verdict has not yet been rendered. The mother of the alleged second wife, though she visited her daughter while she was living with Clawson, never inquired whether she married him or not. The father of the accused testified that he never talked with his son about the matter till after the indictment had been gotten out. Other relatives swore similarly. President Taylor said there could be no marriages at the Endowment House unless authorized by him or those to whom he gave authority. Had authorized probably 100. Could not recollect the names of them. Geo. Q. Cannon swore he didn't know anything about the record of the Endowment House; he wanted to remain ignorant; couldn't give the names of anyone who officiated at the Endowment House. James E. Caine, son of Delegate Caine, was again on the stand to-day, and affirmed his former testimony as to admissions of accused; said Clawson talked to him about his wife, and expressed doubt as to the accuracy of the language; said he had no doubt he told Clawson he didn't give a d—n and would tell the truth. The testimony of the defense was mainly impeaching that of witness for the prosecution. After it was through the lawyers say the case is far stronger than before

How much better informed are the citizens of Los Angeles, as a whole, in regard to the varied productions and industries, and the agricultural progress of this section, than they were before the commencement of the Fair that has just closed? We are not yet fully awake to the educational tendencies of such exhibitions. They are of value not only to the farmer, who gathers from them new ideas and fresh methods for prosecuting his work, but they are of value to the community. They show capital what it has to depend upon, and what it has to hope for and build upon in the future, and capital should not stand aside and say, "I do not know as to the productiveness of this country. I have not been there." The attendance at the Fair has not been what it should have been, nor what it will be at such times, when the community is fully awake to its best interests.

* * *

In accordance with our custom on Sundays, the TIMES up to this morning with a miscellaneous budget of the latest items, noted in various departments of human activity. We have had opportunity to learn, somewhat, at least once a week, even in a Presidential canvass, a paper which is not overloaded with matters political. Man cannot live by politics alone.

* * *

The rains are coming early this year. Can it be possible that Nature is in sympathy with the Democracy and that she has turned herself into a weeping Niobe over present and prospective defects of the Democratic party?

The very lengthy premium list which we print on this page cuts off our usual choice special articles and Sunday variety.

UNDERTONES.

Is life worth living? is a question which is not unfrequently asked. It depends upon what we live it for. If it simply means for us a period of buying and selling, a race to get rich, it is not of much account. It surely is not worth the trouble and toil inseparable from fortune-getting. But life in its larger sense is vast as eternity and grand as Heaven. It is a forgetfulness of self; it is charity; it is helpfulness to others; it is expansion of soul and the perfection of being.

* * *

The man who does not make the most of himself is a robber. He steals from himself the possibilities of happiness, knowledge and usefulness that are his to use, and throws them away; he robs the world of the benefactions and blessings that he might heap upon the race, and defrauds his Maker of the interest which he should return daily upon the faculties which have been given him. Yet he considers himself, and so does the world, an honest man.

* * *

We are too apt to make mistakes in our estimates of our fellow men. A man is not always to be measured by his reputation. Reputation is often something that does not go deeper than the surface of things, while character is the strong underlying rock of the hidden and inner life—that which the man is; calumny cannot touch it, nor vituperation assail it.

* * *

"They Say" is a terrible power in a community, a ubiquitous oracle who is found in every land and clime under the sun, and in scandal-loving circles is greeted the world over. Without any distinctive individuality, "They Say" is irresponsible, untrustworthy and treacherous, and it is well to have a watchful eye on those who are forever retailing the assertions of "They Say," and giving prominence to uncertain floating rumors that can be traced to no authority. "They Say" is particularly lively during political campaigns.

THE LIST OF PREMIUMS AWARDED.

A Very Large Crowd at the Pavilion Yesterday—The Fair Voted a Success.

Strange enough, Mr. Del Valle did not explain to our people why he had voted in favor of General George Steele, their elected Senator, although he had promised to do so. He did in Santa Barbara and San Luis Obispo, but in Ventura he said nothing. Is it possible Mr. Del Valle feared that he would lose a few Democratic votes here by an explanation. Is such silence as this calculated to win the cordial support of honest and courageous men? I should judge not. In local politics there is no change. The three-cornered fight on the Judgeship complicates matters somewhat; but aside from that the thing is beginning to take definite shape. It will be a mixed ticket, I think; yet not so much mixed, either. Do not think now that I am going to begin prophesying, for I am not—at least not yet. I have too high a regard for my reputation for truth and veracity to undertake anything in that line—but a prominent local politician offered to bet me $100 the other day that there would not be one hundred straight tickets voted in the county. I did not take him up, for reasons which it is not necessary to enter, but I think he is mistaken.

MISCELLANEOUS.

We had rather a heavy rain here on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, doing no little damage to the new crop. As a whole, however, the good done by it will more than counterbalance the evil.

It now seems probable that the Ingalls people will capture a majority of the next Board of Supervisors.

I see that Storke has decided to run as a candidate again at Steele, and the monopoly will draw but cold comfort from this Switzerland district.

It now seems probable that the Ingalls people will capture a majority of the next Board of Supervisors.

I see that Storke has decided to run as a candidate again at Steele, and the monopoly will draw but cold comfort from this Switzerland district.

One of the strongest fights of the present campaign is that of Orestes Orr, Republican candidate for District Attorney. He will win it, too. The people know that he can be trusted. Put this in your hat.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE.

(Tals is the TIMES-MIRROR's Public Forum. Those who would stand thereon must first give the editor their real names and be responsible for their opinions and statements.]

Some Pertinent Questions for Mr. Del Valle.

To the Editor of the Times — SIR: In view of the great importance of the tariff question to the people of California, as well as to Ohio and Maine, would it not be extremely interesting to know just how Mr. Del Valle stands on that question? And if it would not be considered impertinent by Mr. Del Valle, I beg to ask him that question directly in this public manner. I am sure there are a great many voters besides myself in the bailiwick in which Mr. Del Valle is running who would like to have this question answered authoritatively: Which wing of the Democratic party does Mr. Del Valle adhere to—the free trade or protection wing? Indorsing, as he must, the platform and general policy of his party, one would suppose that he is in favor of free trade. Is it possible, if he is elected, that he would favor the abolition of all protective duties on the wines and wool and citrus fruits, etc., of Southern California? Will he respond?

Fitch in Pomona.

Correspondence of the TIMES.]

POMONA, Cal., Oct. 17.—Hon. Tom Fitch addressed the largest audience ever met in Pomona last night. There were between two and 3,000 present. There was a torchlight procession. Two hundred and fifty torches were given out and about fifty applied for, but could not be supplied.

After the procession had disbanded, the Hon Mr. Fitch was introduced by the chairman of the evening. When he first began his grand oration, some Democrats in the parts of the meeting somewhat removed from the speaker, kept criticizing the arguments and words of the speaker, but before long he so held them under the spell of his magnificent eloquence that they were silenced. Frequent and deep cheers followed his keen thrusts at the Democratic party. Then the audience was treated to an impromptu song from Mr. Eells, of Pomona. The crowd dispersed, with three hearty cheers for Blaine and Logan and the speaker.

The Democrats went home sadder, sadder, and, let us hope, wiser men.

Mr. Milton Lindley.

La Cronica of yesterday says Milton Lindley, the Republican candidate for Supervisor in the Third District, which comprises all of the country west of Main street, from Buena Vista to Los Angeles many years, and is well known as one of our very best citizens. He was our County Treasurer a few years ago, and the many Spanish-Americans who then voted for him know that he was an honorable officer. Mr. Lindley, when elected Supervisor, will attend faithfully to the great interests of Los Angeles county, and we also believe he specially devote himself to the improvement of our roads.

Noon.

The sultry noon sleeps on the drowsy hills,
On fragrant grasses ripening in his beams;
White swarthy summer in voluptuous ease,
Stretches her lazy length beside the streams.

The sun swings high athwart the cloudless blue;
The air is scintillant with fervid heat,
All nature droops like living things that faint;
E'en birds are silent in each cool retreat.

The flowers droop pensively; the languid leaves
Scarce answer to the soft air's whispered call;
Dimly their faintly quivering shadows lie,
Where shimmering bars of golden sunlight fall.

The sun-burned reaper, with his brows adrip,
Enjoys his midday rest beneath the trees;
Anon he hears his brawny breast and arms
To catch perchance some faintly stirring breeze.

The browsing cattle leave the parching fields,
To seek the shelter of some shady nook;
Or, heedless of the fragrant clover, stand
With hoofs deep buried in the cooling brook.

The rustle of the gray grasshopper's wing,
The wild bee humming on her busy round,
Are music sweet to half unconscious ears,
Mingling with the distant harmony of sound.

And so, with idle pace, the droning hours
Stretch out their golden length with dreamy grace;
Swooning in odorous airs, and waning light,
Till night enfolds them in its soft embrace.

THE NAKED TRUTH.

A month had passed since Bruce Leyton came to Carringford with the intention of remaining a week, yet even now he seemed in no haste to depart. It had dawned fully upon his consciousness, that, to go back to New York without Ellen as his wife, or, at least, without the solemn compact of a duly symbolized engagement, was a risk he was not willing to run. And on this lovely summer-day, while she was at the Rectory, he was wandering like a restless spirit through the grounds, vaguely wondering what life would be to him without her bright presence to glorify it. It was true that he had arrived at no certain knowledge of the state of Ellen's heart; but what young man of twenty-two, with more money than he knows what to do with, and all the fashionable world at his feet, is apt to see any darker coloring to his wooing than the rose hue of success? He knew she had never displayed any of that coyness which maidens usually exhibit, when they fancy themselves the objects of adoration to the other sex, and that she had always been perfectly frank with him at all times and places. But she was so young and innocent, artless as a child. She would look up into his passionate eyes with her sweet, confiding gaze, without the slightest perception of the adoring love he could not wholyl conceal. He felt a throb of exultant joy as he thought that no plummet-hand had yet sounded the depths of that pure, virgin heart; and he pictured to himself her sweet, shy surprise when the first awakening came to her—the glimmering dawn of her young love. Few men are patient wooers, notwithstanding their old prototype served twice seven years for his Rachel. They reach a point where, in spite of reason, judgment, conscience, they will stake life itself on the throw of the dice. Mr. Leyton was an exception to his sex. The intense idolatrous passion of this, his first love, seemed to him like a mighty, rushing river that would overleap all barriers. There was no element in it of that deep, white-heat calmness, that is eternal—the majestic symbol of the divine Eucharist. "I will go at once," he said, "and get Uncle Philip's permission to address Ellen; then before the day closes I must know the word which the fatal urn has in store for me."

There was one heart not at all in harmony with the beauty of the summer day. Daniels sat in his "den" rigid as marble, his hands clenched and hanging supinely at his side. Consciousness was partially suspended from the strain of a recent conflict. He had fought a terrible battle with himself and to so little purpose, he thought. On that eventful morning when Ellen had proposed leaving Carringford to earn her own living, the conviction had come to him like a flash of lightning that he could not spare this child's life out of his own.

Farther than this he did not go. He did not stop to analyze the motive. His only thought or care was, that she would never leave him. And when he had gained her promise to forego her purpose for at least another year, the fear of losing her gradually passed away, leaving him, as he thought, secure in her possession. But on this summer morning the scales had fallen from his eyes, and he had stood face to face with the naked truth at last. Ellen and Mr. Leyton were in the drawing-room; she was playing one of Beethoven's symphonies, and he was standing a little apart with his face in strong light, and all the passion of his passionate nature written upon it. Daniels had a full view of them, as he entered the front hall from the piazza. One glance in his nephew's face told him the whole story. The shock was fearful; he threw up his hands, slowly reeled backward like a man from some imminent peril, and leaned heavily against the outer door for a moment; then he suddenly wheeled and fled to his den for refuge, madly wishing that he could as easily flee from his own wretched, accursed self. This unexpected turn of affairs had not entered into his calculations; and yet he ought to have foreseen this from the beginning, he thought bitterly. She was so young and slight—only a child, he told himself. And yet she was almost seventeen—past the age when some girls marry. Indeed he could count a score within his own observation, who had become wives before they were scarcely out of the nursery. Was it not the Ultima Thule of every young girl's dream? Yes! he ought to have expected this. Ellen's finely wrought organization and charming naiveté would attract any man, especially a young man of Bruce's temperament. And he, with the physical development of an Apollo Belvidere, with high principles, with varied and brilliant talents and wealthy in his own right—what lady would not be proud of his choice? He did not blame either of them. It was the old, inevitable law of gravitation. But he scorned himself with an unutterable scorn, that he, Philip Daniels, with his dead past, that he loathed—the fatal Charybdis in which his proud manhood had gone down—could stoop to dally with love again; scorned himself that he could not throttle the wild, free thing and crush it under his heel. Ah, God! the wild, free thing dies hard and takes many a Proteus shape. He might curse his folly over and over again. The grim, naked truth still faced him steadily, and from under that basilisk-gaze his soul would nevermore be lifted. The sweet wild-flower that had blossomed upon the moss grown ruins of his heart was infinitely more precious to this lonely man than life itself. As from the decayed flower there often drops the seeds of new birth and bloom, so from the dead love there sometimes springs a new one full of fragrance. His heart would never cease to reach out after it, across the barren waste of his manhood, with a hunger that was pitiful; for he knew, beyond all questioning or cavilling, that he loved the child he had cherished with the height and depth only such natures can reach, over whom the volcanic fires have swept, burning their lives to a white-heat stillness. Yet he knew from the beginning how it must end. And so, with a heroism worthy of Plato, he grappled his future and held it with a death-grip, while he looked on like one turned to stone as the grave of desire was dug in his heart, and heard, like one who hears not, as the cruel clods rattled with a dull, hollow thud upon the coffin lid. It was finished at last, even to the headstone with its inscription, 'A Fool's Folly.' The sacrifice was complete. But it is easier to make a final and irrevocable renunciation than to gauge life by its obligation in the days and years that are to follow. Ay! and there is more than one memorable instance when the corpse has stirred in its coffin, and come forth from the tomb galvanized with new life. He started up and shook himself from the apathy that was slowly stealing over him, then gave three sharp, quick blasts on a silver horn. Ten minutes later he heard Lion pawing the ground outside. He sprang to his back and gave the low word of command. The charger shot away like an arrow, just as Bruce Leyton called out, "Uncle, Uncle Philip! Wait a moment."

Daniel's first impulse was to dash on as though he had not heard. Then he thought, "Why not end it all now? By Jove! It shall be," drawing in the reins with so sudden a movement that Lion fell back upon his haunches.

"Well?" he said with icy bitterness, as the young man came up.

Leyton was too much absorbed in winning his cause to notice the tone or notice the ghastly pallor of his uncles face.

"Uncle Philip! I love Ellen," dashing in with hot-headed impulsiveness, "and I want my fate decided to-day."

"I know it," dryly. "I presume your arrangements are all made."

"No; upon the honor of a gentleman, I have not spoken a word to Ellen; neither, I think, does she suspect my intention. But uncle, I wish to ask your permission to address her upon the subject to-day."

Daniels was looking away to the quiet hills, and not a muscle in the white face moved. Presently he laid his hand heavily upon the young man's shoulder, and, leaning down, said solemnly, as though he were taking a last farewell of his dead: "Take her and cherish her as never woman was cherished before, and may God deal with you as you deal with her." "Amen!" said Leyton fervently.

Then horse and rider were gone like the wind.

XVII.

THE LADY'S "SO."

The next morning Leyton descended to the library at a very early hour: he knew he would find his uncle either there or in his 'den.' He found him in the latter. The young man was pale and dejected and his face had a worn, weary look, as though he had kept a long night-vigil; a perfect contrast to his usual, bright, happy self.

"Beg pardon, Uncle Philip, for intruding so early. But I wish to catch the north-bound express, and came to say good-bye."

"Going away," said Daniels, astonished, and regarding him keenly for a moment. "Has your wooing gone awry? Don't be so easily discouraged. Remember the old adage, Vincit qui patitur. Only patient perseverance will succeed. Besides, a lady's no is proverbial.

"Colors, seen by candle-light,
Will not seem the same by day."

Take my advice. I have seen more of the world than you have. Patiently bide your time till the garrison is lulled into fancied security; then storm the citadel; your reward will be unconditional surrender. Prove yourself a general and a Stuy——my God! that name has not passed my lips for more than twenty years. But, boy, prove yourself worthy of the race that bore you, whose device—"Dare and Win"—was handed down from father to son for untold generations. Ellen is only a child—does not know her own heart yet; or perhaps, like her sex, enjoys the sense of her power. Wait, I repeat; dare to wait patiently and you will win in the end.

"No, uncle Philip! Ellen is not one to trifle. She is made of finer clay than that; her decision is final."

"Based upon what reasons, may I ask?" with darkening brow.

"The very best of reasons; she loves another."

Daniels, white to the very lips, had sprung to his feet and was striding up and down the room.

"By all the gods! what villain has dared to woo her in that clandestine manner? No gentleman would so dishonor himself or her. And she—I was a fool to hope that she might prove an exception to her sex. They are all alike; they will nestle in your bosom only to turn at last and rend you—"

"Uncle Philip!" broke in the young man hotly, "I will not hear such things said about Ellen. I am a dismissed suitor, it is true, yet I honor and love her above all women, and she is worthy of the homage. She will not stoop to the level of any man, who is not entirely her equal. Besides, whatever intimacy there is between them, it has not taken the shape of a confessed avowal; for I am fully convinced she herself did not suspect the true state of her own heart, till the shock of my proposal brought her face to face with it."

A cynical smile curved Daniels' finely chisled lips.

Japan Falling into Line.

Japan appears to be wheeling into line with the Western Christian civilizations, and even to be taking a step in advance of most of them, in one respect at least. Recent action of the government in the direction of a severance of the connection between church and State is one of the notable events of the times. The priests of Buddhism and Shintoism, and all interested in keeping up the old systems, will of course be found in opposition, and use all possible efforts to stay the march of progress in the island kingdom. They see in this an indication of their decaying influence, and that without the aid of the State their systems must perish. The resentment is intensified by the readiness with which so large numbers of the Japanese adopt Christianity. In fact, the missionaries themselves, so we are informed, are somewhat alarmed at the signs of the times. They look with anxiety upon the great movement toward Christianity in view of possible reaction. They should remember that God will take care of his own. The Christians of this country, meantime, should wake to the urgent necessity of re-enforcing the corps of Christian teachers to meet this great and singular exigency.

The People's Highway.

From the San Francisco Chronicle.]

The Los Angeles Herald congratulates the farmers of Southern California upon the fact that wheat from that point is being shipped to Liverpool via the Southern Pacific Railroad. "It makes the Los Angeles farmer independent of that highway of all ages, old ocean," it says, "and lands his crop in the English market almost before, in a sailing vessel, it could reach Panama on its course around the Horn." This is undoubtedly true; nevertheless, the wheat growers of Los Angeles cannot afford to dispense with the ocean highway. If it were not for the ocean freight it would be impossible to raise wheat for export at all, because the railroad tariff would be prohibitory. The certainty of ocean competition compels the railroad to bid for traffic at a rate which enables the farmer to live. Of course our southern friends are to be congratulated on their alternative freight route to Europe. When the Panama Canal is finished, however, they will be in a much better position, both in respect of ocean and railroad freight than they are at present.

Too Much Apple-Jack.

A WICKED ADULTERATION.

Eleven Per Cent of Tartrate of Lime Discovered in Price's Baking Powder.

Analysis of Price's Baking Powder, of Chicago, shows:

LIME..... 3.53 per ct.
AMMONIA..... 1.05 per ct.
Starch.....19.00 per ct.

Prof. Habirshaw, of New York, found the following in Price's Powder:

TARTRATE OF LIME.....11.85 per ct.

Aside from the inferiority of a powder containing a useless substance equaling about one-eighth of its entire weight (and which is the cause of the great lack of strength of Price's Baking Powder, as shown by the tests of the Government Chemists), there is to be considered the serious consequences that may arise from taking this large amount of lime into the system.

Lime cannot be decomposed by heat, and is not eliminated in mixing or baking, and therefore, all of this enormous proportion, as found in Price's Baking Powder, remains in the bread, biscuit or cake with which it is mixed and is taken into the stomach.

By the application of heat to lime carbonic acid gas is driven off, and there is left quick lime, a caustic so powerful that it is used by tanners to eat the hair from hides of animals, and in dissecting rooms to quickly rot the flesh from the bones of dead subjects.

Lime mixed with starch (and both are found in Price's Powder) will produce a ferment. The process is not quick, and does not take place until the food in which the baking powder is used has been some time in the stomach. Indigestion, dyspepsia and more serious disorders result.

The cause of this large amount of Lime in Price's Baking Powder is the use of cheap and impure materials.

Prof. C. B. Gibson, Chemist of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Chicago, had in view these impure powders containing lime, like Price's, when, after having made an examination of many of them, he volunteered the following testimony that Royal Baking Powder is the best and purest in the market:

THE ROYAL ABSOLUTELY PURE.

"ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO.: I recently procured a sample of your (Royal) baking powder from the kitchen of a private family in this city, and subjected it to an examination. I found it so different from many of the baking powders advertised as 'strictly' and 'absolutely pure,' and so far superior that I thought you would be pleased to know it, and might find use for the certificate.

"In view of the vast difference and stupendous frauds that are offered to the most 'gullible' people on the face of the earth, it pleases me to occasionally strike an 'honest article.'

"Respectfully, C. B. GIBSON."

"SHIPS OF THE DESERT" EN VOYAGE.

Guarding Against Ambuscade and Attack — Struggling Up the Gray Slopes of El Biod.

IV.

[BY OUR SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR FROM THE SOUDAN.]

Despite the necessity of keeping a sharp look-out for our uncomfortable neighbors, the horned vipers, referred to in our last paper, as well as sleeping with "one eye open," lest our friends, the Arabs, should attempt to take revenge for their late repulse and defeat, some of us at least managed to snatch a few hours repose, and by early morn we were all amove and ready to make one supreme effort to reach El Kreider and traverse the narrow causeway between the chotts of El Chergui and El Garbi before the close of day.

It was therefore determined to make what we shall be justified in calling a forced march, for the distance to be covered was some five and twenty miles, and, as already stated, it was of the utmost importance that the narrow neck of land between the chotts should be passed before nightfall; for as no one knew when the enemy may not swoop down, suddenly, upon us, we should, beyond all doubt, run the risk of being annihilated if, while part of the force had passed the causeway, that part, or section remaining on the other side, were to be attacked by the enemy.

It will perhaps raise a smile on the lips of our younger and more vigorous readers to speak of a journey of only five and twenty miles as a forced march; but we can assure them that, having done some rather stiff marching in many parts of the world, and especially so in India during the revolt of the native army in 1857, '58 and '59, we had rather repeat any of those marches than again attempt that one which it was now necessary to accomplish, cost what it might.

Word was therefore passed quietly round that whatever was not absolutely necessary among the baggage of the men should at once be cast aside, for many of these latter had overladen or that they were driven too fast in our eager endeavor to pass the chotts before night.

Towards morning a false alarm was given by one of the sentries, who imagined he saw the enemy advancing to the attack, and although we soon "turned in" again, there was no more sleep for us that night, the cries of the jackals, which crowded around the bodies of the dead camels, supplying a new subject wherewith to await the morn.

We had found a fair amount of water in some of the r'deis, and as the men had been terribly pressed by the last march, it was decided not to break up camp until about noon on the following day. We therefore had time to make some short visits to such other spots within hail as seemed to offer a chance of finding water, and at one of these, near which stood a ruined mosque, without a minaret, we found some beautiful palm trees—the only ones we had seen since we left Saida.

The palmier nain or dwarf palm tree, a species belonging to the genus known as the macaw tree or fan-palm, grows over large tracts of the region about the chotts, and its leaves are readily devoured by the camel when no other food is to be found. Here, too, are to be found those large green and yellow lizards which one sometimes sees in the museums and which often attain a length of from three to four feet, their flesh being white and tender and by no means to be despised as an article of food.

In the baggage of the regimental cook it was served up in a variety of forms, the chef de cuisine smilingly informing us that it was much better than chicken or veal, which, he assured, were, when insufficiently cooked, prime causes of dyspepsia and doctors' bills.

In proof of his assertion he quoted the well-known lines of Theophile Gautier:

> "Le veau mal cuit,
> Le soulet cru,
> Font le cimetiere bosseu!"

which, for such of our readers as may have forgotten their French, we may say, means that veal and chicken, underdone, fill the church-yard, or more correctly make it hump-backed, the latter expression referring to the heaps which are usually superimposed on newly made graves.

About noon the "fall in" was sounded, and taking a last look at the calm and placid waters of the great chotts of El Chergui and El Garbi which stretched away for nearly a hundred miles on either hand, and whose waters reflected the many-colored hues of the cliffs which here and there towered proudly above them, we pushed on for the ws is of Bou Medfa, some twelve miles away to the south at the foot of the chain known as the Djebel Gomri.

Our route now lay across a succession of ridges, capped here and there by great clumps of aloe, which is here in California known as the "Century Plant," many believing that it raises its tree-like central stem—decorated with symmetrical branches and flowers, but once in a century.

But the fact is that although this plant thrives best in a dry atmosphere, yet when its feet are bathed in a humid soil, the "flowering" will take place every few years, and many times in the course of a century.

After marching for about three hours through the stretches of sand, mixed here and there with masses of rock, which latter helped to render it impossible to keep the column in anything like a military formation, we got sight of our intended encampment for the night; and the camels, scenting water in the air, stretched their long necks toward the wells in our front, and having given the column a brief halt to allow us to throw it into something like fighting shape should the possession of the wells be again disputed, we pushed steadily onward, and by seven in the evening occupied a position commanding the springs, which were soon surrounded by men, horses and camels, all eager to swallow a portion of the precious fluid.

The wells, about seven in number, afforded us abundance of water, and having taken such precautions against surprise as were necessary in such a place and under like circumstances, we lay down to sleep, and soon forgot the long and weary march to the Wells of Bou Medfa!

Next morning we were in motion at a very early hour, for during the night one of the native scouts brought in word to the commandant that Bou-Amema, the religious leader of the insurgent Arabs, was at no great distance from us at the head of several thousand spears, and, knowing that if he and Si Sliman should be able to effect a junction, our position would at once become perilous in the extreme, it was determined to make but one march of the remaining distance to El Biod, a distance which was generally traversed in two days.

We therefore broke camp at three in the morning, and having served out extra ammunition to the men, and having hitched the Gatling gun on to a pair of camels, we struck out at a rapid pace, for it was now cool, on our way to El Biod.

Long ere the hour of noon arrived, however, it was evident that the pace at which we were marching would, if kept up, soon begin to kill—would, in fact, prove as dangerous as an attack by the enemy—so a brief halt was ordered, and biscuit with a little brandy and water was served out to the men.

Our road now lay all up hill, for El Biod stands at an elevation of about three thousand feet above the sea level, and this fact added to the fatigues of the march. But we still pressed onward at a rate which, under ordinary circumstances would never be thought of, the result being that the exhaustion of the men became so great that the little remaining water was soon consumed.

About three in the afternoon a storm burst upon us—a sand storm—such as one can only see in the Sahara, and although every man knew the danger that threatened the column from the forces of Bou Amema and Si Sliman, it was painfully evident that we could not go on much farther without water.

It was therefore determined to halt the column in a spot which offered special facilities for defense, and choosing from among the cavalry the horses and men least fatigued—the latter leading themselves with the empty bottles of their comrades—the writer of this notice rode on for El Biod, accompanied by Captain Ulrich, of the Chasseurs d'Afrique, who commanded the detachment.

The rate at which we advanced was slow enough, for the horses threatened to give way before the men, but by nursing the forces of the former whenever the route permitted, we finally drew near to the battlements, which resisted alike the sand-storms and assaults of the Arabs.

A few words explained to the garrison the critical position of the column, and charging with water bottles the few horses then inside the fort, we returned at full speed to those who so anxiously awaited us among the sand hills, some five or six miles away.

We arrived none too soon, for whilst all were suffering from thirst and exhaustion, some of the younger soldiers had become delirious; so, dividing among them the water bottles we had filled at the fort, the aspect of affairs improved, and once inside the ramparts of the fortress, the wayward soldiers would be safe from the hosts of Si Sliman and Bou Amema.

Every one now braced himself for the final effort to gain the crest on which El Biod stood, and after many brief halts to draw breath and many maledictions on the Gatling gun—which had rendered such good service, but the wheels of which would stick so deep into the soft sand, thus rendering it necessary to push the machine on from behind—we at length, and at about seven in the evening reached the outposts of El Biod.

Everybody was out to render assistance to those who had given such proofs of courage and fortitude, and receiving from the commanding officer the order to "break ranks," man and beast, alike, rushed toward the beautiful little lake, whose form is that of the figure 8, and soon all the fatigue and thirst of the long march from Saida was forgotten!

Having rested for two days at the dreary outpost, we bade adieu to those kindly Frenchmen who could see nothing but disaster before us in our attempt to reach El Golea, Ulrich, of the Chasseurs d'Afrique, accompanying us a short way from the Fort to exchange a few parting words and to say "Au revoir!"

And you, brave Captain Ulrich, if ever you should come to Los Angeles,

> "Where you can bathe in sunshine,
> Can breathe the purest air,
> Can eat with keenest relish
> The plainest kind of fare;
> Where you can wear plain clothing,
> Although a little soiled,
> And be thought as much of
> As the finest shirt were boiled"—

I shall endeavor to prove to you that we have not forgotten "Auld Lang Syne"—the shard times in the trenches before Sebastopol and in later years that wild ride through the desert and up the gray slopes of El Biod!

STUART STANLEY.

Three Good Lessons.

"One of my first lessons," said Mr. Sturgis, the eminent merchant, "was in 1813, when I was eleven years old. My grandfather had a fine flock of sheep, which were carefully tended during the war of those times. I was the shepherd boy, and my business was to watch the sheep in the fields. A boy who was more fond of his book than the sheep, was sent with me, but left the work to me, while he lay under the trees and read. I did not like that, and finally went to my grandfather and complained of it. I shall never forget the kind smile of the old gentleman as he said: 'Never mind, Jonathan, my boy; if you watch the sheep, you will have the sheep.'

"What does grandfather mean by that?" I said to myself. "I don't expect to have a sheep." I could not exactly make out in my mind what it was, but I had great confidence in him, for he was a Judge, and had been in Congress in Washington, and left him, so I concluded it was all right, and went back contentedly to the sheep. After I got into the field I could not keep his words out of my head. Then I thought on Sunday's lesson: "Thou hast been faithful over a few things." I will make you ruler over many things." I began to see through it: "Never you mind who neglects his duty; be you faithful and you will have your reward."

I received a second lesson soon after I came to New York as a clerk to the late Lyman Reed. A merchant from Ohio who knew me came to buy goods, and said: "Make yourself so useful that they cannot do without you." I took his meaning quicker than I did that of my grandfather.

"Well, I worked upon those two ideas until Mr. Reed offered me a partnership in the business. The first morning after the partnership was made known, Mr. James Geery, the old tea merchant, called in to congratulate me, and he said: "You are all right now, I have only one word of advice to give you: 'Be careful whom you walk the streets with.' That was lesson number three."

And what valuable lessons they are: Fidelity in all things; do your best for your employers; carefulness about your associates. Let every boy take these lessons home and study them well. They are the foundation-stones of character and honorable success.

"English Babies on Horseback.

London Letter.]

One of the pretty sights in Hyde Park is to see some golden-haired baby, richly dressed, taking her airing, not in a "perambulator," but on the back of a handsome horse. She is securely tied into a saddle a good deal like a cradle. There she sits and surveys the passing world with the serene dignity of babyhood, while a liveried footman carefully leads the horse. The English boys and girls begin to ride literally when they are babies. I saw one tiny girl who could hardly have been six years old, and seemed small for that age, riding a big horse in the park, as erect and sure of herself as any of the crowd of brothers and sisters, and what not, who were riding with her.

Fruit unto God.

There is a great deal we never think of calling religion that is still fruit unto God, and garnered by Him into the harvest. The fruits of the spirit are love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, patience, goodness. I affirm that if these fruits are found in any form, whether you show your patience as a woman nursing a fretful child, or as a man attending to the vexing details of a business, or as a physician following the dark mazes of sickness, or as a mechanic fitting the joints and valves of a locomotive, being honest and true, besides, you bring forth fruit unto God.—[Robert Collyer.

Mr. Conkling and the Stalwarts.

Utica Letter in the New York Sun.]

Mr. Conkling's present retirement from politics leaves the stalwarts in the State at full liberty to act as they please, and, judging from appearances hereabouts, there seems to be no question that they will support Blaine as unanimously, though probably not as enthusiastically, as the half breeds.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

MERE CHAT WITH THE BOYS AND GIRLS.

The Indian Idea of How Bad White Men Are Transmuted Into Wild Turkeys When They Die, Etc., Etc.

The Squirrels' Party.

Next came a big Toad with his brown mottled coat,
With a blade of green grass tied over his throat,
For a necktie, you see, and he winked his black eye
In a hoodlum-like way to each passer-by

And a little brown Sparrow came chirping along,
And a golden Canary burst into a song;
And a green-Bottle Fly escorted, so proud,
The little Housefly, who felt lost in the crowd.

A Caterpillar came on his numerous legs,
And a Locust stood high on his two slender pegs,
(And if you believe it?) came next Puss-in-Boots,
In the waistcoat of frills and gayest of suits.

And a little Moth Miller floated by on her wing,
All dressed in her best—but, poor little thing,
Her dress was so plain a Vain Butterfly whispered,
"Her clothes are all scorched, and her hands there are blistered.

Why cannot people learn common-sense, ah!
not fret,
When no common and dowdy, to go with our set?"
"Unless we was invited," said the bright, buzzing Bee,
"so, though her clothes are so poor, I think she must be

A nice little lady, for Mrs. Squirrel would never Invite any but those who were well-bred and clever;
And, if you will excuse me, I think I will go
And walk the rest of the way with her, for she's lonely, I know."

So, with a low, stately bow, the buzzing Bee went
To walk with Miss Moth Miller, who smiled
her content,
With the merriest buzzing the Bee went on
with her,
And how happily they laughed and chatted
together!

And following next came a wee, tiny Mouse,
All dressed up in fur, with a close-fitting cloak
And behind, as lean and lank as could be—
So thin that all his poor ribs you could see—

Came the Dog of Old Mother Hubbard, but he Had elegant manners, and at once you could see
That if he was poor his politeness was real,
And the ladies all thought him their best beau-ideal.

Next came a big Rat, with Mrs. Rat by his side—
I think they were just married, for she looked like a bride—
And she wore for a bonnet a white, downy
feather
And a shawl made of spiders' web fastened
together

With a diamond raindrop; and next came
A bright shining fellow, not a bit of a loafer,
And a great yellow Rooster strutted along
With cut-cut-cut-ah-cut, which he meant for good morn;
And he gayly white Hen followed on with
her brood,
Who, though lively and merry, yet never were rude.

But the next couple you would have laughed to have seen.
'Twas a Pig and a Jack Rabbit, and I know that he
Their trying to talk and to keep step together
They soon must have felt as weak as a feather.

But of all this great company I cannot write,
If you could have seen them you'd have thought it a sight—
That wee Brownie Mouse so set as they wended their way
To the grand Squirrel party that was given that day.

They had dinner at six and the table was spread
In the green forest aisles with the boughs overhead;
Each place was a maple leaf yellow as gold,
Each napkin a white lily leaf with a fold
So nicely turned down, and was fragrant and sweet
As the wind-flowered carpet that was spread at their feet.

On each side [illegible], stretched out
Behind each [illegible] a solemn black
Crow
With [illegible] val, as fine as a dandy
And the whi[illegible]els that were needed
and handy,

Of the dinner that followed I'll tell you
next week,
The dishes and dancing, it shall all be complete.
It will be a long story, but I'm sure you will wish
The description comple e of every dish.

—ELIZA A. OTIS.

Dear Boys and Girls of the Times-Mirror: I find there is not room for the whole story of the Squirrel's party this week. It was such a fine affair there is a great deal to be said about it. But you shall have the balance next week. I wish we had a bigger corner, we have so many things to talk about, but we could not have that without crowding other people, and that would never do, you know.

The TIMES has been telling us lately about the Indians who used to live here before the white men came. Like white people there were some things about them very good, and some that were very bad. They had some very queer tastes too, and I do not think that we should have enjoyed a dinner with them at all. What do you suppose they used to call? Why, toads, lizards, grasshoppers, rats, and even snakes sometimes, together with almost all kinds of small animals. They would not eat large game. They had a superstition that the souls of Indians passed into large animals after they died. In Mexico, near the northwestern border, there is a tribe of redmen called the Navajo Indians who will not eat turkeys, although the turkey grows wild in that region and are very numerous. These Indians believe that bad white men, when they die, are changed into turkeys. I do not wonder that they do not care to eat them if they believe this, for I do not think I should relish a bad white man, even if I could eat him in the shape of a fine fat turkey.

When I was a little girl I had a brother who was about nine years old. He was what is called a somnambulist, or one who walks in his sleep. I can remember many funny things that he did, and some queer, as well as dangerous places that he got into when walking about in his sleep. But when he was about thirteen years old he was broken of this habit in this way: He was away from home in the beautiful city of Keene, New Hampshire. On the banks of its lovely river was a large manufactory, and near by was the great millpond, where the water was smooth and still, but very deep. It was made by damming up the water of the river, and the water-power thus secured was used for running the machinery of the great mill. My brother had been about the mill all day watching the busy wheels, and the great looms, and the wonderful spinning-jacks on which the wool was spun into yarn. He had been into the carding-rooms, where the wool is first run through swiftly-revolving machines, with thousands of fine, sharp teeth and many rollers, from which it comes out in sheets like those of cotton-batting which we buy at the stores, after which these are put upon a second carder, and from this they come out in slender ropes, which are wound on large spools, almost as long as my arm, and from these yarn is spun after they have been placed on long spinning-jacks, holding about two hundred bobbins. His thoughts were full of what he had seen, for even as a little boy he was very fond of machinery, and I suppose when he went to sleep he dreamed of it all again. At any rate, about midnight he got up and partly dressed in his sleep, slipped softly out of doors and wandered down to the mill again. Of course he could not get in, for it was locked. Then, without waking, he went down to the pond whose deep waters lay black and cold under the old moon of the midnight sky, and there he took off his clothes and plunged into the water. The shock wakened him, but at first he did not know where he was, only that he was in the water, and he did not know which way to head for the shore. He was a fine swimmer or he would have drowned in his fright; but he made some bold strokes and struck out for the middle of the pond. But in a minute or so, when he was fairly awake, and had become accustomed to the darkness, he discovered where he was and turned about for the shore, which he soon reached. After a short hunt he found his clothes, and putting them on he went back to the house and crept quietly up stairs to bed. This experience so frightened him that he never walked in his sleep again, for which, you may be sure, we were all very thankful, for we were in constant terror lest he should get killed.

And here comes my dear little black-eyed poetess again. Shake hands with me, my dear, and give me a kiss, and let me thank you for your nice little poem about your kitty. You shall see how nice it will read in the TIMES this Sunday. I am very glad to see you, but I hope you are not the only little girl that will bring me something for our column. I want a big family of TIMES-MIRROR boys and girls, and I shall think of them as my very best friends. But here is little Black-eyes poem:

I'll tell you a story about my cat.
She has two pretty ears, and sits on a mat;
She has a pretty white tail, which she whisks so quick,
I don't see how she can sit still with it.

Now I must make my bow and say good-bye to you until next week.

AN INCIDENT OF THE WAR.

Fitz John Porter's Perilous Balloon Ascension.

Ben Perley Poore.]

President Lincoln was much interested in the account of a perilous balloon ascension by General Fitz John Porter on April 11, 1862, near Yorktown, Va. About 5 o'clock in the morning he stepped into the car of Prof. Lowe's balloon, to go up and make a reconnoissance; then he pulled the rope to let down the car, and a place in this, as was afterward ascertained, had been burned by vitriol used in generating gas. Taking his seat in the car, unaccompanied by any one, the rope was let out to nearly its full length—the length was about nine hundred yards—when suddenly snap went the cord, up went the balloon. This was an unexpected part of the programme. The men looked up with astonishment, and the General looked down with equal bewilderment.

"Open the valve," shouted one of the men below.

"I'll manage it," responded the General.

Up went the balloon, higher, higher. It rose with great rapidity. Its huge form lessened as it mounted into the regions of the upper air. It became a speck in the sky. The wind was taking it in the direction of the enemy's territory. By this time every staff officer and hundreds of others were looking at the moving speck. It is impossible to describe the anxiety felt and expressed for the fate of him, the central object of them all. But far-away, moving speck, every moment becoming less visible. It seemed to move toward the Union army, and countenances there brightened with hope. It passed over the heads of the Union men. Soon it began to descend, but with a rapidity that aroused renewed apprehension. Quickly a squad of cavalry plunged spurs into their horses, and away in the direction of the descending balloon. The rest of the story is as received from the General's own lips. While the rope was being pulled out he adjusted his glass in readiness for his proposed view of the enemy's territory. A sudden bound of the balloon told him in a moment that the rope had given way. He dropped the glass, heard the call, "open the valve," made the response given above, and set to work to find the valve. He was not sensible of being flighty (the General loves a pun as well as the next one), but was not at all nervous. He saw the wind had taken him over the line of the rebel entrenchments. Having no wish to drop in among them, he let the valve take care of itself, and proceeded to take advantage of his position to note the aspect of rebel objects below. Crowds of soldiers rushed from the woods, and he heard their shouts distinctly. Luckily, he was above the reach of their bullets, so he was not afraid on that score. The map of the country was distinctly discernible. He saw Yorktown and its works, York River and its windings, and Norfolk and its smoking chimneys. A counter-current of air struck the balloon, and its course was reversed. Its retreat from over rebeldom was rapid. He opened the valve, the gas escaped, and down he came. He could not say how fast he came down, but it was with a rapidity he would not care to have reported. The car struck the top of a shelter-tent, under which, luckily, no one happened to be at the time, knocked over the fire irons. He supposed the usual number of ropes were attached to it, whereas there was only one, and a place in this, as was afterward ascertained, had been burned by vitriol used in generating gas. Taking his seat in the car, unaccompanied by any one, the rope was let out to nearly its full length—the length was about nine hundred yards—when suddenly snap went the cord, and

FARM AND ORCHARD.

POINTS FOR THE DAIRY AND THE RANCH.

Protecting Tree Trunks From the Sun—Management of Pigs—Charcoal and Lime—Yellows in Peaches.

Protecting Tree Trunks from the Sun.

Dr. Samuel Hope, a prominent horticulturist of Georgia, considers the afternoon sun as having a marked injurious effect upon the southwest side of the trunks of fruit trees. The peach, when trimmed high, suffers greatly from this cause, especially in the southern climate. The bark dries up, and unless timely protection is provided, the exposed trees slowly die from the effects of the fiery rays of the afternoon sun. The warming influence of the morning hours is sufficient to overcome the cooling action of the night, and preserve the health of the tree. The effect of the afternoon sun is very marked in blighted pear trees, the southwest side being usually first affected. Trees that are grown on hillsides sloping toward the east and southeast, are much less subject to the mysterious and deadly blight. Currant, gooseberry and raspberry plants are in a like manner affected by the exposure to the bright sun of the afternoon. Experiments in boxing trees, especially the cherry, have been very successful. It is only necessary to protect the southwest side of the tree trunk. Dr. Hope suggests two boards nailed together lengthwise by their edges, and placed on the west side, as being sufficient to protect the tree. Where possible the trees may be protected by being planted on hillsides sloping to the southeast. Low limbs will furnish much shade to the trunks, and may be obtained by proper pruning. The small fruits—currants, gooseberries, raspberries, etc., can be easily protected from the afternoon sun by being planted on the east side of a fence, or other object yielding shade. This matter of the sun-killing of fruit trees demands the attention of all practical fruit-growers.

Where to Keep Milk.

A lady writes to the Michigan Farmer as follows: "I have proven by actual experience that a cellar is not a good place for milk; by using an out-door milk room all running up and down stairs with milk, carrying pans and washing shelves is dispensed with. Air can circulate freely about the pans; by setting on slat shelves and being careful about spilling milk, once a week is often enough to wash them, while the milk is taken from the door for calves and pigs by the men. There is another item, too, worthy of consideration. About 5 o'clock in the morning I go out to the milk room to attend to skimming and straining the milk. I get the fresh air and drink in all the beauties of a "morning in the country;" the sun is just peeping up in the east, almost hidby a clump of trees, the dew is sparkling on every blade of grass and leaf; the birds are reveling in a perfect flood of melody; the cattle are lowing, lambs are bleating, chanticleer is telling shrilly that morning had come; the little chickens and turkeys are peeping for their breakfast, and as I feel the blood coursing through my veins with quickening pulsations, sending a glow to my cheeks and adding strength and health, I know it is better than if I slept the morning away, or stood in a damp cellar skimming milk.

Points for the Dairy.

1. In making butter, good, sound, wholesome food is indispensable. To make a good article from poor material is as impossible in dairying as in any manufacturing industry.

2. In making cheese, the full heat in scalding should be reached very gradually. To suddenly heat a cube of curd is to contract the pores so that the whey and gas of the interior are not fully liberated, and going into the cheese causes bad effects.

3. Excessive acidity in cream before churning causes a partial separation of the butter fats, and the acid so develops glycerine from one of the oils composing these fats. Sour cream does not add to the quality of butter; it simply creates a stronger flavor, in contrast to the delicate flavor of unsoured cream, which is the true flavor of cream.

4. Natural vegetable acids do not harm milk, but the artificial acid of fermenting food introduces an element into the consumption that it is not possible for nature to neutralize, and hence affects the milk. The amount of ferment may be small and do little injury, but if carried beyond a certain point will have a deleterious effect, which experiment, time and again, has demonstrated.

Charcoal and Lime.

Charcoal and lime should be allowed fowls always. Let them have all they will swallow. Even if the fowls are not confined, but especially so if they are. Charcoal pounded up into bits of pieces about the size of a grain of corn a little finer, should be put around small piles where the fowls can have easy access to it, and they will then make use of it. The cost of charcoal is but a trifle, and where the distance from town is so great as to prevent it from being readily obtained elsewhere, the ashes from a wood stove may be saved out, and the small bits of charred wood or charcoal used in place of that made in the regular way. Especially during the spring and early summer months is it desirable to use charcoal freely. Lime, too, is valuable in many ways. In the form of whitewash it begets cleanliness, freedom from disease, and laying it should have lime, where they can make use of it in assisting in the protection of eggs.

Oiling Wagon Wheels.

A well-made wheel will endure constant wear from ten to twenty-five years, if care is taken to use the right kind and proper amount of grease, but if this matter is not attended to it will be used up in five or six years. Lard should never be used on a wagon, for it will penetrate the hub and work its way out around the tenons of the spokes and wheel. Tallow is the best lubricator for wooden axle-trees, and castor oil for iron hubs, but many of the present axle-greases are also excellent, and have the merit of being cheaper and easier to handle. Just grease enough should be applied to the spindle of a wagon to give it a light coating. This is better than rules, for the surplus put on will work out at the ends and be forced by the collar-bands and nut-washer into the hub around the outside of the boxes. To oil an axle-tree, first wipe the spindles clean with a piece of cloth wet with the spirits of turpentine, and then apply a few drops of castor oil near the shoulder and end with a teaspoonful is sufficient for the whole.

Eggs, Ducks or Hens, Which?

[Indian Cultivator.]

An experiment was lately made in Indore for the purpose of finding the relative value of hens and ducks as egg producers. Three of each sort were selected for testing the result by observation as to their relative fertility. Between the first day of January and the end of August, the three hens laid 257, and the ducks 402 eggs. However, in the autumn months of the previous year, the ducks had yielded 617 eggs, while the hens had completely ceased laying. Altogether, therefore, the ducks had produced 617 eggs within the twelve months as against the 258 obtained from the hens. The birds of each class selected for experiment were of the same age, and as far as could be judged, of the same relative size and strength. Of course a more extended series of trials must be undertaken before any definite opinion can be given on the relative merits of duck versus hen in the matter of egg laying. But there are eggs and eggs, and it remains to consider their comparative value for food, as produced by the hen or duck respectively. This was undertaken by a French chemist, M. Commaill, who gave the result of his analysis of both varieties. A hen's egg weighing 60.4 grammes (equal to 14.433 grains avoirdupois), was found to consist of 7.2 grammes of shell and membrance, 52.2 grammes or 86.97 per cent of contents. One hundred parts of the contents of a hen's egg contained 25.01 dry matter, 1.03 ash, and 11.37 fat, while the proportions of the same substance in a duck's egg were found to be 38.32, 1.16, and 15.09, respectively. It follows, therefore, that ducks are not only the more profitable layers, but their eggs are also richer in fat to no inconsiderable extent—facts that will not fail to interest the reader.

Strawberry Culture.

[From the Florida Dispatch.]

When it is possible, select from land which is naturally moist, on the margin of a creek, lake or pond, and use a fertilizer four parts leaf mould or dry muck, two parts unbleached wood ashes and one part fine bone dust, applied freely around the plants and along the rows. But if you have no such soil as above described, be not deterred from planting. By the proper preparation of the soil, the use of proper fertilizers, flat culture, watering and mulching, good and abundant crops of straw berries can be produced on any fairly good soil, even if naturally "high and dry." If you plant in hills they may be two by two feet; if in drills, to be worked by a horse or mule, the rows may be three and a half or four feet apart, and plants from twelve to twenty inches in the row.

Yellows in Peaches.

[From the Country Gentleman.]

Some of the papers have quoted the statements of Charles Downing on the character of the yellows in the peach, the result of his life long accurate observations, which are worth repeating briefly. His experience has shown its strongly contagious character, and that the healthiest trees will take the disease when growing near infected ones, or by diseased buds inserted into healthy stock, or by seeds. The first indication, as is now well known, is the premature ripening of the fruit, with dull, discolored flesh. We have been familiar with the nature of the disease for more than half a century, and have seen the four trees next surrounding a diseased one all affected on the branches nearest the diseased tree, and afterward the four perished. Using a knife on a healthy tree which had been previously used on an infected one, communicated the malady.

Management of Pigs.

I see from reading that it is a common practice with some farmers to keep their pigs in their manure cellars, compelling them to feed upon the excrement of other animals. This I presume is done to the pigs in hunting their food will turn and thoroughly mix the manures. But I think such treatment is abhorrent to all ideas of cleanliness. Confined to cellars, the air contaminated by the decomposing manures, is surely productive of disease in the pigs, and to the person who consume the pork. It is in the way parasitical diseases are communicated and fatal blood disorders as spread.

It seems to me inhuman to force an animal who is a very clean housekeeper, when given a chance, to live, eat and sleep in such filth.

Ashes for Cracked Pears.

If any one has a pear tree that has been spotted or cracked fruit, says Cropper in the New York Tribune, let him sprinkle wood ashes freely over the soil beneath the tree, as far in diameter as the branches extend—not a light sprinkle, either, but a liberal dressing. Then wash the bark thoroughly with strong soap-suds (old-fashioned soap preferred), with the addition of lime water, and a little flour of sulphur. I had a white Doyenne pear tree treated in this way, that previously bore only imperfect fruit, but which after treatment gave some delicious, highly colored specimens. It may not cure in every case, but it will do no harm.

Apples.

As a rule large apples do not keep as long as small ones of the same variety. On the other hand, the well-formed but very small and unripe apples often found in the center of a thick top are not desirable, as they are never good eating, and they often wither and fail to keep well. Overgrown apples and small ones they are first-class in other respects, should usually be put with the second-class.

To Get Rid of Lice.

To get rid of the chicken lice, give the coop a good cleaning with white wash and use carbolic acid. Keep perches well oiled with kerosene and carbolic acid. 2d. Your chicks have the roost separate them from the healthy ones and feed stimulating food, such as corn-meal, onions, seasoned with egg food or red pepper.

Hay Water.

Hay water is a great sweetener of tin, wooden and iron ware. In Irish dairies everything used for milk is scalded with hay water. Boil a handful of hay in water, and put in the vessel when hot.

A Smoking Soul.

There are some people who are always bubbling over with humor, in season and out of season; everything is turned by their Midas touch to sparkling merriment. What unconscious physicians these people are! It doth one good like a medicine to hear their voices, and to see their faces always running over with laughter like a mountain spring. The healthiest and longest-lived persons almost always have a twig of humor in their make-up. There is something wonderfully preservative in laughter. A man who cannot laugh is like a tree from which the worms or the winds have stripped all the leaves. It soon grows feeble and sapless, and dies before its time. The healthy tree laughs with its myriad of leaves for generation after generation, sound at heart and beautiful to look upon; and when it dies the woodman cuts it down, and finds the allotted number of rings in the firm, white wood, and core as sound and sweet as the sapling's. So it is with the man whose disposition is one of sunshine and laughter. He lives merrily and dies cheerily, and the world is better for him. His memory does not pass away like that of the sour, grum misanthrope. There may be grander things about a man than his humor, but there is nothing by which he will be remembered so long. After his wisdom and his learning are forgotten, if he ever laughed, that laugh will be his memorial. It will go ringing on, when every other utterance has died away. Happy are they who are happy

He Wasn't There.

They were talking politics,
In a very earnest way
And little Katy listened
To all they had to say.

They spoke about the neighbor
An undecided man,
Poor little Kate looked troubled,
Then from the room she ran;

But presently returning,
She said in tones intense,
"I've looked for Mr. Smith papa,
And he isn't on the fence!"

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

SAN FERNANDO.

A SPLENDID REPUBLICAN MEETING.

[Correspondence of the TIMES.]

SAN FERNANDO, Oct. 16, '84.—San Fernando had a perfect Republican love-feast on the night of the 15th, it being the occasion of the largest political meeting ever held in this place. So impatient were the crowds that long before the time to begin the speaking the hall was filled to overflowing. At sharp 7½ o'clock Senator Maclay called the meeting to order. Col. H. C. Hubbard was elected Chairman, H. W. Griswold Secretary.

The Chairman, after announcing the object of the meeting, read the following from the Los Angeles Herald: "Ohio Republican by a large majority!" Coming as it did through Democratic channels, it was electric. With one accord and as a single man there arose a cheer loud and earnest for the man from Maine, James G. Blaine.

The first speaker of the evening was Ben E. Ward, candidate for County Recorder. His address was good and straight to the point. We predict his election. A. A. Montaño, candidate for County Auditor, was then introduced. In a few neat and appropriate remarks he placed himself squarely before the citizens of this place. He has made many friends by his quiet, gentlemanly manner.

Charles Dunsmoor, candidate for County Clerk, in an easy and business way, won his way into the hearts of this community, and it does not require one to be gifted with the spirit of prophesy to foretell his election.

El. Hammond, candidate for County Tax Collector, was called upon. This being his home, he merely stated that he was proud that he was, and had always been, a Republican, and predicted success for the whole ticket, national, State and county.

The candidate for County Treasurer, George Gephard, was called. In a manly, good-natured way he told why he was entitled to the votes of all, and George will come as near getting them all as any one we know of.

A dispatch was now received and read: "Ohio 30,000 Republican." This announcement brought every man upon his feet. Cheers were given for Blaine, Logan and for Ohio.

The Hon. H. W. Magee, candidate for the Assembly in this district, was introduced. In a scholarly way he depicted the Democratic party in their frantic efforts to ride two hobbies at once. He clearly pointed out to the farmer, the artisan and all others that are dependent upon their labor for their daily bread, what free trade means to them and to the country. That our candidate is an able, upright gentleman none can deny, and we think he will have in this precinct a large Democratic following.

Hon. F. P. Kelly, of Los Angeles, being introduced, at once placed himself en rapport with his audience and held them entranced to the end of his able, powerful speech.

Senator Maclay, the veteran, in his own peculiar happy way told some anecdotes, and also spoke of the ticket to this effect, that never before had a better or stronger ticket been offered to the voters of this county. With three times three cheers for the entire ticket, closed the most successful meeting ever held here. 76.

SANTA ANA.

THE WAY THE OHIO ELECTION NEWS WAS RECEIVED, ETC.

[Correspondence of the TIMES.]

SANTA ANA, Oct. 16.—A refreshing shower visited this vicinity last Sabbath. It was not specially beneficial to the raisin industry. Monday morning dawned upon us bright and beautiful, and thus it has continued since. Candidates for office are unusually social, and "glad to see you." It is sad to think that the saloon-keepers get most of the money, if not of the offices. So it is a settled fact that he who cries down his own party candidate and praises the fancied qualifications of the opposing candidate, is not much of a party man, or a man to be relied upon. Report says that "Santa Ana" (correspondent of the Evening Express), offered to vote at the Democratic primaries, and his vote was refused.

The comments on the result of the Ohio election were unusually interesting and variable. One Democrat on being asked the latest news from Ohio said the State had gone Democratic by 12,000 majority. Others said the tide would turn before November 4th, etc., while the more hopeful ones said Ohio was not needed to elect Cleveland. As the Democrats went home to tea Wednesday eve they were scarcely recognized by their families, as their faces had grown so long. They relished neither the food nor the interrogatories as to the result in Ohio. On the other hand the Republicans are all smiles and actually feel a sympathy for their Democratic neighbors. The comments of the TIMES editor on the results in Ohio Wednesday morning were worth a year's subscription to the paper and were hugely enjoyed by Republicans hereabout. Now that the agony in Ohio is over everybody takes it for granted that Blaine and Logan will be elected and have settled down to their usual vocations.

The Presbyterians of Tustin open their new church next Sabbath for regular service. They have a very neat, tasty edifice, seated with chairs. Mr. D. Hewes is deserving of great credit for his interest in this enterprise. I understand he has met all the expenses so far and only asks that each person interested give what they can without embarrassment to themselves.

Grapes are still shipped from this valley to the eastern market. There will not be as many raisins made this year as last in this valley, but the quality promises to be much better.

The English walnut crop is quite large and is now being gathered.

The Republicans had quite an enthusiastic meeting at Tustin last night, at which a number of candidates made ringing speeches. The good news from Ohio serves as an inspiration to the Republican speakers. A surprise is in store for the Democracy of this county.

NEWTON.

WILMINGTON.

A DEAD CHINAMAN FOUND IN A SLOUGH.

[Correspondence of the TIMES.]

WILMINGTON, Oct. 18, 1884.—Considerable satisfaction is manifested over the returns from Ohio, and frequent "I told you so's" are being poured into the unwelcome ears of our Democratic brethren.

We are anticipating a great political treat next Tuesday evening, and are preparing to give our future legislators a full house and a warm welcome.

A dead Chinaman was fished out of the slough yesterday, between here and San Pedro. He had $200 in his pocket, which shows that he was not murdered for his money. It is supposed that he was walking the railroad trestle and fell through, striking his head and stunning him, so that he could make no effort to save himself from drowning.

Kate Castleton and troupe gave All at Sea on Monday evening last to a full house. The play was well rendered and elicited frequent applause.

There were two interments from San Pedro in our village cemetery last Wednesday. At this rate San Pedro will soon need a graveyard of its own. Both the above deaths were from natural causes, something unusual for that busy port. SUB.

The Boston Pilot claims that nowhere in the world is the Roman Catholic church more flourishing than in New England.

Jones.

A large and respectable audience assembled last night on Court street to listen to a speech from one of the best known men in Los Angeles. At ten minutes before eight Captain Janes ascended the platform alone and faced the listening crowd. He spoke for one hour, dealing with facts and figures and local issues in such a way as to interest all who heard him. Some of the questions asked were answered, at least to Janes's satisfaction, were "How I got my nomination," "Why I started the Shipping Gazette," and others of like character. He showed himself familiar with the shipping and other interests of Los Angeles, and certainly sent his audience away satisfied. Janes is nothing if not original, and many a worse man is found under a smoother exterior.

Short's Exhibit.

W. M. Short, the artist, had a very fine exhibit of sketches and crayon portraits at the Pavilion, which was (as a whole) deservedly awarded the first premium. Mr. Short has been but a short time in the city, but the general excellence of his work will commend him to all. His display at the Fair won him much praise, and those who are in need of instruction in his line will find him a thoroughly capable teacher.

THE PROHIBITIONISTS.

A Straight Ticket Put in the Field Yesterday.

SOME VETERANS REFUSE TO SERVE.

Report of the Organization and Nominations—Plan of the Campaign—Money Wanted.

The Prohibition County Convention convened yesterday morning at Good Templars' Hall. W. D. Gould, Chairman of the County Central Committee, called the meeting to order and made a short address, saying: "As we do not expect to elect a single man on our ticket at the coming election—but I, for one, do expect that in two years from now we will elect our candidates—in selecting men to-day let us choose those of our own party; men whom we can fully rely upon; men who have declared themselves, and men who will strengthen the ticket. It is also desirable that each candidate should make a thorough canvass, at his own expense." It had also been thought advisable by the committee that candidates make arrangements to hold at least three meetings every week from now until election day, and that about $300 be expended in the circulation of temperance literature, and also have some extra editions of the Western Wave printed and circulated throughout the county, with able articles advocating the cause. Again the committee deem it advisable to have as many tickets printed as there are voters in the county, and upon election day have men at the polls who will see that they are not wasted; but on the contrary to use their influence to have them deposited in the ballot box.

TEMPORARY ORGANIZATION.

At the close of Mr. Gould's remarks the election of temporary Chairman was declared in order, and Rev. J. W. Ellis was chosen for this position, and B. N. Barrett, of Pomona, as temporary Secretary.

The following committees were then appointed:

On Platform—R. R. Haines, Dr. C. L. Brown, Rev. J. H. Harris.

Organization—A. G. Damon, of Compton; J. L. Taylor, of Los Angeles; Rev. F. D. Mather, of Pomona.

Order of Business—S. Townsend, of Pasadena; Rev. G. W. White, of San Gabriel; B. F. Davis, of Los Angeles.

Credentials—J. Yarnell, M. L. Quinn, J. C. Brown.

A recess of ten minutes was then taken, during which time Col. Russell, of Alameda county, addressed the convention on the temperance question. No regular report of the Committee on Credentials was made, but the delegates signed the following pledge:

THE IRON-CLAD PLEDGE.

We, citizens of Los Angeles county, over 21 years of age, delegates to this convention, hereby renounce allegiance to all other political parties, and pledge ourselves to support the Prohibition Home party, and to vote and work for St. John and Daniel for President and Vice-President.

Jesse Yarnell, J. C. Brown, M. T. Quinn, W. J. Finley, J. F. Buckbolder, P. Peterson, W. N. Rand, W. J. Tibbett, G. E. Howe, P. Tibbett, S. Brown, Mrs. Sarah Rush, Mrs. E. A. Lake, Mrs. B. Shinn, V. Davis, W. A. Barley, C. E. Birge, J. R. Townsend, B. F. Elliott, J. Campbell, A. M. Elsworth, S. B. Webster, J. Stunts, A. Wright, J. W. Potts, A. G. Hinkley, G. E. Meharry, L. Allen, B. A. Harvey, S. F. Daniels, J. B. Camp, T. E. Reeves, D. M. Burrett, C. W. Brown, E. F. Denay, B. E. Street, J. H. Harris, H. Eno, R. Rogers, A. H. Langley, T. D. Milner, W. M. Taylor, A. M. Palmer, W. D. Gould, G. D. Damon, G. W. White, J. W. Davis, S. Townsend, H. S. Daniels, Mrs. W. D. Gould.

The Committee on Platform not being ready to report, nomination of county officers was declared in order, and proceeded as follows:

For Sheriff, Ralph Rogers of Los Angeles was nominated by acclamation.

For County Clerk, W. D. Gould placed in nomination J. W. Gillette.

On motion Mr. Gillette was elected by acclamation.

For Treasurer, Mr. Geo. D. Compton was placed in nomination by Jesse Yarnell, and elected by acclamation.

For Auditor, W. D. Gould placed in nomination J. W. Potts—late candidate for the same office before the Republican Convention.

Mr. Yarnell placed in nomination Dr. Lyman Allen, of Pasadena.

Mr. Allen declined and placed in nomination Russell Case, of Pasadena.

Considerable discussion took place, and Dr. Allen withdrew the name of Russell Case. J. W. Potts was then nominated by acclamation.

Mr. Potts made an address, stating that he had been a Republican for 28 years, that he had not left the Republican party, but the party had left him. [Applause.]

For Recorder, Mr. Brown placed in nomination Russell Case, of Pasadena.

Mr. Case was on motion elected by acclamation.

NOTES.

There was not a single representative in the convention from the southern portion of the county.

Of the nominees presented, three were formerly Democrats, the remainder Republicans.

Of the judicial nominations, one of the nominees was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court last week. The nominee for District Attorney has never been admitted to practice in this State.

A call was made at the close of the session for funds, and the statement made that $300 would be needed for the campaign. Seventy-five dollars was subscribed by the delegates.

All the speakers used the most vindictive language towards the Republican party. It was urged by one speaker that if the Democrats were elected this year the Republicans would be forced to join the Prohibitionists at the next election.

The Prohibitionist campaign will be opened to-morrow night, speakers being sent to various portions of the county.
